

Face to Face Live Announces the Availability of IP and ISDN Video Conferencing Bridging Services for H.323 and SIP Conferencing Systems

Face to Face Live, Scottsdale, AZ, announces that they are opening up their Network Operating Center's IP and ISDN bridges for any company or organization looking for a way to connect their various video conferencing endpoints together for meetings for a low, affordable fee.

Scottsdale, AZ (PRWEB) November 1, 2009 -- Face to Face Live, Scottsdale, AZ, announces that they are opening up their Network Operating Center's IP and ISDN bridges for any company or organization looking for a way to connect their various video conferencing endpoints together for meetings for a low, affordable fee.

Face to Face Live has built their strong service reputation by offering unlimited IP and ISDN bridging for all of their clients and by managing the client's video and collaboration deployment. Now, Face to Face Live would like to offer their bridging services on a per call basis or on an unlimited monthly basis for all companies or organizations.

Video bridging mirrors that of the popular, yet dated, audio conferencing that allows for multiple persons from across the globe to dial one number that brings them all together. With video bridging, now you can collaborate with fellow employees or clients in real time while seeing them Face to Face.

"One of the most important elements to communication is body language," said Al Smith, CEO of Face to Face Live. "With our video bridges, companies around the globe can collaborate with each other while seeing each other. And for as little as $149 hour, you can actually see for the first time the people that you are collaborating on a project with!"

Face to Face Live was founded on the idea of offering affordable high definition video conferencing and collaboration solutions for businesses and organizations of all sizes, from one person consulting operations to the Fortune 500.
